

Yep, you read the headline correctly.

Whole Foods has given Arizonans for Wildlife, which is the Humane Society of the United States (HSUS) in disguise, a green light to solicit ballot initiative signatures at their stores.

So, if you have been a patron of Whole Foods, you might want to find another grocer in Arizona.

Whole Foods had a choice to cater to HSUS. You have a choice to spend your grocery money elsewhere.

In case you missed it in the last couple weeks, the head of HSUS Wayne Pacelle has resigned, even after the majority of his board voted to keep him. Here is a link to shed some light on that development.

Also of interest, the Arizona Humane Society has clarified the fact they are not the Humane Society of the United States! Click here for their statement.

Helping dogs and cats at animal shelters is a noble endeavor pursued by the Arizona Humane Society.

Ballot initiatives based on emotion, lies, misstatements and untruths to eliminate scientific wildlife management, and ultimately eliminate hunting, are the modus operandi of the HSUS.
